Africa's Interim positive Agenda

- Issues that arise from the implementation of the current multilateral trade agreements. These include fulfillment of commitments by trading partners relating to special and differential provisions treatment and how best to link those provisions with a time derogation with qualitative development criteria. This will require careful stocktaking of the implementation process at the national level by individual countries to provide the basis for a common approach to common problems.
- The need to seek a satisfactory resolution to market access problems such as tariff peaks, tariff escalation on certain specific items of export interest to African countries in certain markets.
- The increasing resort to the use of non-tariff barriers by invoking certain provisions of the Agreement on Technical Barriers to Trade and the Agreement on Sanitary and Phytosanitary Measures. The need to fully implement the Marrakech Decision on Measures in Favour of Developing and Least Developed Countries.
- The question of how measures to deal with weak competitiveness and supply constraints in the short and medium terms could be accommodated in future multilateral rules as the role of tariff preferences declines with increased tariff MFN liberalization.
- The revisiting of such issues as customs valuation, pre-shipment inspection, agriculture liberalization and the interests of the net food importing countries within the framework of the built-in agenda to address the lingering concerns.
- Imaginative approaches to the negotiations on trade in services to give concrete meaning to and derive concrete benefits in the implementation of Article IV of the GATS which provided for development concerns to be taken into account in the liberalization of service sectors.
- An annex is required to the GATS to ensure the strengthening of the telecommunications structure in LDCs.
- The need for the rectification of imbalances specifically identified in certain agreements with respect to the operation of the "stand still" provisions e.g. on TRIMS, the Agreement on Agriculture and the Agreement on Subsidies. The need to reassess these provisions from a development perspective.
- In general, the need for special and differential provisions in future multilateral rules to encompass qualitative development criteria.
- There is need for the multilateral rules to take account of such problems as weak competitiveness and supply constraints.
- On TRIMs, there is need to ensure a linkage between investment and competition policies.
- On the new issues of trade and investment, trade and competition policy, government procurement, environment, etc., the need to ensure that the development dimension is duly taken into account in any WTO negotiations.
- The distribution of benefits arising from the WTO agreements as Africa's share of international trade has continued to decline standing at 2.2% in 1997. An assessment of the effects of the Uruguay Round Agreements on Africa is required to determine whether the predications for trade expansion have materialized.

Africa's position on Trade and Investment

It was suggested that Africa should adopt a minimum common position while leaving certain dimensions of the question to individual Member states to formulate their own national positions. Among the elements of a minimum position agreed upon by ministers were the following:

- a) the development dimensions of FDI should be taken fully into account in any possible multilateral agreement on the subject;
- b) portfolio investment which is more volatile should not be governed by any multilateral framework on investment;
- c) full use should be made of the usual WTO mechanisms including phasing, transitional periods, limitations to cross retaliation, and the positive list approach of the GATS;
- d) a multilateral framework on investment should be explicitly linked with a similar framework on competition policy.
